Language Teaching in Blended Contexts

Margaret Nicolson, Linda Murphy and Margaret Southgate (Editors)

Written for those teaching languages in adult, further and higher education this edited volume offers a comprehensive overview of the key issues faced in teaching languages in blended, open and distance contexts. Intended, in particular, for staff development the book examines the impact of different learning environments on pedagogic practice and recognizes the particular socio-cultural, psycho-linguistic and cognitive issues that have to be taken into account when working with diverse adult language learners in flexible settings. The contributors draw on a firm research base to better inform and develop good practice.

Education and the Arts (Policy & Practice in Education series, PPE, 22)

Beth Dickson

Tensions exist between process and product: is arts education intended to produce artists; is it a means of producing audiences; or another way to motivate learners? What does 'creativity' mean and how do current definitions impact on curricular practice in arts subjects and in subjects not traditionally linked with the arts? In a wide ranging review of the issues and tensions of contemporary policy and practice Beth Dickson offers a distinctive analysis of arts education, its purpose and its role.

International Education: Educating for a global future (PPE 26)

Margery McMahon

This critical perspective on international education tracks and analyses its development as a national strategy in Scotland, England and the USA. The author explores its relationship with other concepts such as global citizenship and inter-culturalism. She provides practical analysis and compares models of implementation across nations.

Youth Work in Communities and Schools (PPE 28)

Annette Coburn and David Wallace

Working across professional and disciplinary boundaries, young people and youth workers collaborate to create powerful learning environments in communities, schools and other settings. The authors explore how youth work, as a critical and problem-posing pedagogy, enables young people to transform their lives. The result is a critical appraisal of youth work in the context of an increasingly risk averse and surveillant society.

Coaching and Mentoring: Developing Teachers and Leaders (PPE 29)

Edited by Christine Forde & Jim O'Brien

In the continuous drive for improvement in learning and achievement in schools, the development of teachers and of school leaders remains a major focus. Alternative approaches to professional development have been introduced to Scottish education including coaching and mentoring and learning communities. This volume appraises the effect of such initiatives.

Children and Organised Sport (Protecting Children and Young People series)

Anne Stafford & Kate Alexander

Much is known about the benefits to children of participating in sport. Less is known or understood about potential risks faced by children in these settings. Providing new knowledge about the potential for harm to children this book will inform all those involved with children's sports and sport's governing bodies as they develop policies and practice designed to keep children safe in sport.

Community Education, Learning and Development (Third Edition)

Lyn Tett

'This book should continue to be the book for Scottish students of community education/learning and development, as it accurately describes the history and nature of CLD work in Scotland today. It should also be a book on every CLD practitioner's shelf as it describes our long and powerful heritage of transforming education and reminds us why we chose this challenging profession.' Education in the North

Family Learning: Engaging with Parents (PPE 25)

Jeannie Mackenzie

This book is an invaluable resource for any professional interested in developing partnerships between parents and schools. Useful practical examples and case studies are held together by an incisive analysis of the positive impact of viewing parents as educators, examining language for inherent manifestations of power and constructing educative projects as a collaborative endeavour sustained by dialogue.' Education in the North

Physical Education: Picking up the baton (PPE 27)

Malcolm Thorburn and Shirley Gray

'From a policy perspective therefore and for anyone interested in contemporary developments in curriculum and pedagogy in physical education (and/or Health and Physical Education), Picking up the baton will make for an interesting read. While firmly focused on the Scottish context, the text engages with issues that have significant international relevance and appeal.' Sport, Education and Society

The Social Agenda of the School (PPE 12)

Jim O'Brien and Gale Macleod

'This excellent and thought-provoking book packs a lot of information and raises a great many important questions between its slim covers. Written for practising teachers undertaking professional development, teachers in training, education policy makers and school managers, it more than fulfils its remit. It should have a place on the bookshelf of all involved in the education and the welfare of young people, should they wish to be informed in this important debate.' Support for Learning
